“With this exhibit, we hope to bring different seasons to Houston, showcasing how the environment changes through the lens of each artist’s methodology,” said Foto Relevance Co-founder Bryn Larsen.

Laurie Lambrecht’s lyrical approach to her work comes from her engagement with the tactile qualities and nuances of pattern and color found in nature. Her work celebrates the form, subtlety, and enduring presence of these details in a way that invites viewers to share in the experience. This line of thought extends throughout her “China,” “Lake Trees,” and “Jungle Road” series, selections from which will be on view. In addition, works from Lambrecht’s series “Roy Lichtenstein in His Studio,” photographed during her time as an assistant to the artist, will be on display.

David Reinfeld’s visualizations of trees strike a balance between his backgrounds in both science and art. He has always been consumed with how things are seen. As an artist, Reinfeld’s work ranges from traditional compositions in his “Forest” and “Canyon” series to painterly, post-processed images in his “Brick & Mortar” and “Feynman’s Notes” portfolios. Reinfeld takes the viewer on a journey to appreciate how light, throughout various seasons and times of day, can change how and what we can see.

“We look forward to connecting these two artists with the vibrant arts scene here in Houston. Lambrecht is an internationally known artist returning to Houston with added work that has not been shown here before, and this is David Reinfeld’s Texas debut,” added Foto Relevance Co-founder Geoffrey Koslov.
